3 Panel Comics

Stories can be told through words and through drawings, and when they're combined it's called a comic. Comics can be as long as whole books, but it really only takes 3 pictures, or panels, to tell a simple story.

First, fill in the panels below with a sequence of three actions or events

Then, draw pictures of each action showing how things change from one panel to the next

Last, fill in any sounds or dialogue. You can use speech bubbles to show that a character is talking, and change the shape to show emotion. You can also use thought bubbles to show what someone is thinking, and sound effects to show what other sounds might be happening!
